W: Charles Martin, thank you for joining us today. Could you tell us about your recent project?

M: Of course. I've been working on a new environmental program in our community. We've been organizing clean-up events and planting trees to reduce pollution.

W: That deserves praise. How does your family feel about the time you're devoting to it?

M: Well, it's been challenging. My family has been supportive, but I can sense their concerns.

W: I see. What are their major concerns?

M: They worry that I might not have enough time for study or that I'll neglect my responsibilities at home.

W: That's understandable. How do you plan to address these concerns while continuing your important work?

M: It's a balancing act for sure. I'm making an effort to involve them in some of the community activities, so it becomes a family effort. And I've been working on better time management.
